

A Wireless vs. Wired

Installation

If networking your computer requires you to replace existing wiring with Ethernet (Cat 5) wire, you might want to consider a wireless alternative. Replacing existing wiring can be difficult and/or expensive depending on your environment.

Reliability

Wireless networks suffer a few more reliability issues than wired networks. Wireless signals are subject to interference from other electronic devices including, but not limited to microwave ovens, cordless telephones, and garage door openers. Interference can be minimized with proper installation.

Performance

Network performance is another consideration when deciding between wired and wireless connections. Wireless connections are distance sensitive, meaning that maximum performance will degrade as computers farther away from the Verizon FiOS Router. As more wireless devices communicate simultaneously at the same time, performance degrades even further.

Mobility

The greater mobility of wireless networks helps offset the performance disadvantage. Mobile computers do not need to be tied to an Ethernet wire and can move freely within the wireless network range.

Security

You should consider security when deciding between wireless and wired connections. In theory, wireless networks are less secure than wired networks because wireless communication signals travel through the air and can easily be intercepted. The weaknesses of wireless security are more theoretical than practical. Wireless networks protect their data through the Wireless Equivalent Privacy (WEP) encryption standard which is enabled by default on your Verizon FiOS Router. WEP makes wireless communications reasonably as safe as wired ones. No computer network is completely secure and network owners should research this topic to ensure they are aware of and comfortable with the risks.

	Wired	Wireless
Installation	moderate difficulty	easy, but beware interference
Cost	less	more
Reliability	high	reasonably high
Performance	very good	good
Security	Reasonably good	Reasonably good
Mobility	limited	outstanding

B Before Installing Your Wireless Network

Before installing your wireless network, please note the following:

- You should consider using the same operating system on all the computers connected to your network.
- You should consider using the latest operating system including all fixes and patches associated with the operating system. The most current operating systems tend to have the most robust features for wireless connectivity.
- You should consider placing your Verizon FiOS Router at least 10 feet from certain cordless phones, microwaves, or other electronic devices to avoid potential interference.
- Your Verizon FiOS Router operates at the 2.4 GHz frequency. If you experience interference when using a 2.4 GHz cordless phone, and you are unable to relocate your cordless phone, consider upgrading your phone to 5.8GHz or 900 MHz.

New cordless phones using 5.8GHz and 900MHz are generally not known to cause wireless network interference. If you are unsure which frequency your cordless phone operates at, place that your phone at different part of your home and the manufacturer's website.
