The framework that informed this study

Dimensions of Assessment

Assessment Dimensions

Three distinct areas of assessment dimensions must always exist simultaneously: "the content area, the process area, and the product area" (or, rather, as a more modern term, "value dimensions" with the "product" being the "value" of the assessment).

Any assessment with these 3 underlying dimensions will either be "Progressive," "Process oriented," or "Product oriented" and will be discussed by referring to these three.

See <http://www.eric.ed.gov/FullText.aspx?DocumentID=24000000000000000000>

Three Domains of Assessment Dimensions

Assessment Dimensions

There are three "parallel dimensions" (parallel because they are content oriented) dimensions and three "process" and "product" oriented dimensions (the process and product dimensions supporting the content).

Dimensions extend past the "content" area (Content area being an area where the dimensions would have many other sub-dimensions within), and these dimensions are, in fact, value dimensions. The three dimensions provide us great opportunity when constructing the assessments.

These 3 dimensions are content (or the "Product," "Process," and "Value" dimensions), and the "process" and "product" dimensions are the "Progressive," "Process oriented," and "Product oriented" value dimensions. These three areas of assessment dimensions will be discussed in the "Product" section, and "Progressive" and "Process oriented" will be discussed in the "Value" section of this study (these sections will be discussed later).

Parallel dimensions are "content," "process," and "product" areas (with the "product" dimensions supporting the "content" and "process" dimensions). The "content" dimension is the "value" dimension, the "process" dimension is the "value" dimension, and the "product" dimension is the "value" dimension. The "content" dimension is the "value" dimension, the "process" dimension is the "value" dimension, and the "product" dimension is the "value" dimension. The "content" dimension is the "value" dimension, the "process" dimension is the "value" dimension, and the "product" dimension is the "value" dimension.

As the three dimensions, either the content, and the process, and the product, there are three areas: "Content," "Process," and "Product." These three areas support the "value" dimension. The "value" dimension is the "value" dimension, the "value" dimension, and the "value" dimension.
