Hydrophobicity (and thus, hydrophobicity) has been investigated in a wide range of systems, including the interaction of hydrophobic surfaces with water, the interaction of hydrophobic surfaces with organic solvents, and the interaction of hydrophobic surfaces with biological systems. The interaction of hydrophobic surfaces with water is the most studied, and the most important, of these systems. The interaction of hydrophobic surfaces with water is the basis of the hydrophobic effect, which is the driving force for the formation of the water network in the vicinity of the hydrophobic surface. The interaction of hydrophobic surfaces with organic solvents is also of interest, as it is the basis of the solubility of many organic compounds in water. The interaction of hydrophobic surfaces with biological systems is also of interest, as it is the basis of the recognition and binding of many biomolecules to the surface of the cell membrane.
