

relationship with a high percentage of the group. I could improve to develop these relationships and make new relationships with members of the group that I have a weak relationship with. I can do this by simply making conversation and making them feel comfortable in my company. This also links into my social skills, which I believe are of a high standard. I have many strong relationships with my group and I feel that I can approach all of them about any situation.

My self confidence is of a reasonable level, but I am always conscious to whether I have missed out a piece of key information when explaining a task or making a decision. This leaves a sense of doubt that can be detected by the group. To improve this I believe I need to do more research into the field I will be operating in and to stick by my decision once that I have made it. (Laker, 2002)

To become more inclusive I am going to take knowledge from Nelson Mandela and follow him and do what is best for everyone or the group and not just myself. Making my sessions more applicable and enjoyable.

Conclusion

In conclusion I believe being an Inclusive leader is very important as it allows you to connect to many different people from various walks of life and to influence them on many different levels, such as personally, socially and intellectually.
