

Literary Analysis of "Lord of the Flies"

Gilding often uses the setting to connect various events that might seem to be completely unrelated. In Lord of the Flies every detail has a second meaning, whether it's in a religious sense or political. One of the most amazing allegories about Lord of the Flies is that nearly everything parallels with the cold war. Each major character represents a different country and world leader. Ralph represents the USA as President Truman. This is clear because he is always taking the democratic approach, he discusses each idea by calling a meeting with the conch. Jack represents Stalin and the USSR.

Jack rules under an iron fist or more literally a combat knife. Jack came to power under the pretense that everything will be fine if the kids stick with him. He took away any hope from the other kids by telling them no one is coming and they will be stuck on the island forever, he then made it seem that his camp has plenty of food to go around and is all around much better than Rally's camp. This sort of government that Jack lead under has many distinct similarities to communism. Piggy in this allegory would be Winston Churchill, the prime minister of England during the start of the cold war.

Piggy on his own was not powerful, but when allied with Ralph he had strength and brought some order and peace between the two of them. It is also important to note the truce between Piggy and Ralph was an accurate representation of NATO. Jack and Roger would be the Warsaw Pack in this allegory. In the cold war if any countries in either alliance attacked the other it was clear that it would result in the third world war and potentially the end of civilization as a whole. In the first chapter Piggy says m... TLD you hear what the pilot said? About the atom bomb? They're all dead." (Gilding, 17) which shows that England was bombed being the reason that they left. "The rock struck Piggy a glancing blow from chin to knee; the conch exploded into a thousand white fragments and ceased to exist." (Gilding, 181). This in the Cold War allegory would also show the destruction of England (Piggy). At that moment all truces and any hope of a peaceful resolution was shattered alongside the conch which was the last romance of civilization on the Island. There was at that point no chance in both Jack and Ralph surviving. When Ralph runs into the woods he grabs the sick sharpened on both sides . " He saw that the white face was bone and that the pig's skull grinded at him from the top of a stick... He wrenched the quivering stick from the crack and held it as a spear." (Gilding, 266). The fact that the sick is sharpened on both sides shows that if he is to kill Jack that he will die anyway from the other end of the sick. It is the atomic bomb, were no matter how he uses it there is no turning back and he will go down with Jack. Gilding does an amazing job throughout Lord of the Flies peeping the Cold War theme going, near
