

INSTALLATION - OPERATION - MAINTENANCE INSTRUCTIONS

TYPE MG-6 MULTI-CONTACT AUXILIARY RELAY

CAUTION: Before putting relays into service, remove all blocking which may have been inserted for the purpose of securing the parts during shipment, make sure that all moving parts operate freely, inspect the contacts to see that they are clean and close properly, and operate the relay to check the settings and electrical connections.

APPLICATION

The type MG-6 relay is designed for applications where several independent circuits must be energized or de-energized upon the operation of a single primary relay contact, or where the capacity of the primary relay contact is inadequate for the energy required in a control circuit. In certain applications these relays may be used directly as primary relays. Since the stationary contacts can readily be reversed so as to be suitable for either circuit opening or circuit closing service (although a slight increase in spring tension may be required on the dc MG-6 relay — see "ADJUSTMENTS AND MAINTENANCE"), it is unnecessary to predetermine the arrangements of the circuits for which the relay is to be used.

In the usual application of the relay, the armature resects when the operating coil is de-energized. However, the relays may be supplied with a latching mechanism which holds the armature in the operated position until the latch is tripped, either by hand or electrically.

An operating coil cutoff contact can be supplied with the electric-reset type, where an intermittent duty coil is required for faster than normal operation, but where the operating coil circuit must be energized continuously. An operating coil, rated at 19% of supply rating may be applied, with a maximum duty of 10,000 operations. (e.g. 24 volt coil on 120 volt dc circuit.

All possible contingencies which may arise during installation, operation, or maintenance, and all details and variations of this equipment do not purport to be covered by these instructions. If further information is desired by purchaser regarding his particular installation, operation or maintenance of his equipment, the local Westinghouse Electric Corporation representative should be contacted.

CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION

The operating electromagnet is at the lower end of the relay, as shown in Fig. 1. The stationary iron circuit is built up of U-shaped punchings. These are slotted at the outer end of the lower leg to receive the copper lag loops used to obtain quiet operation on ac. The operating coil is mounted on this leg of the punchings. In order to improve the performance of the relay on dc, the pole face area is increased by means of an iron plate. This plate is assembled at the end of the coil and the corners of the lamination side plates are bent outward, serving to hold the plate in place. The inner end of the upper leg of the punching assembly is shaped so that the lower end of the armature restraining spring can be hooked over it.

The armature is made of high-silicon steel. Projecting sections on the sides, near the center, act as knife-edge bearings and rest on suitably shaped supports which are a part of the moulded base. A stud attached to the lower leg of the electromagnet extends through a hole in the lower end of the armature, and a stop-nut on the outer end of this stud is used to limit and adjust the travel of the armature in the de-energized direction. The special stop nut used will remain at any position in which it is placed without additional locking means.

The upper end of the armature carries an adjusting screw to which one end of the armature restraining spring is attached. In the hand or electrically reset relays, a latch screw is mounted at the extreme end of the armature. In the self-reset relays this screw is replaced by a set screw which serves to separate the locking plate (see Fig. 1) slightly from the armature. Between the spring adjusting screw and the latch screw (or set screw), there is a
