Student Exploration: Estimating Population Size

Essential Question: How can we estimate the size of a population?

HW

123

Before You Begin

In this simulation, Population Biology, you will estimate the size of a population of fish in a pond. You will use the mark-recapture method, which involves capturing a sample of the population, marking them, and then recapturing them.

The challenge of this activity is to estimate the size of the population of fish in the pond. You will use the mark-recapture method, which involves capturing a sample of the population, marking them, and then recapturing them.

1. Suppose you are a biologist who will fish and release them. What are the assumptions that you must make in order to use the mark-recapture method to estimate the size of the population? List at least three assumptions that you must make.

a. The fish are randomly distributed in the pond. The fish are randomly distributed in the pond.

b. The fish are randomly distributed in the pond. The fish are randomly distributed in the pond.

2. Before you begin the simulation, what assumptions do you make about the population of fish? List at least three assumptions that you make.

Assumption	Assumption
Assumption 1: The fish are randomly distributed in the pond.	Assumption 2: The fish are randomly distributed in the pond.

The "population" of fish in the pond is the population. To apply this to a real-world situation, you would need to know the size of the population. In this simulation, you will use the mark-recapture method to estimate the size of the population of fish in the pond. You will use the mark-recapture method, which involves capturing a sample of the population, marking them, and then recapturing them.

3. The population of fish in the pond is the population of fish. The population of fish in the pond is the population of fish.

a. The population of fish in the pond is the population of fish.
