

THE GLENWOOD MANUAL TRAINING SCHOOL BAND: 1892-1929

Phillip M. Hash

Abstract

This study documents the history of the band at the Glenwood Manual Training School in Glenwood, Illinois, from its origin through the tenure of the ensemble's first long term conductor—Thad H. Davidson. The Illinois Industrial Training School for Boys—later known as the Glenwood Manual Training School and today as the Glenwood School for Boys and Girls—opened in 1887 to provide a home and education for neglected and abandoned boys living on the streets of Chicago. School officials organized the Glenwood Band in the early 1890s to support the military program and provide vocational training. The group made little progress, however, until Thad H. Davidson became director of the band in 1905. Under his leadership, the Glenwood Band became very popular, performing in numerous concerts, parades, and other events throughout the Chicago area. Davidson continued to conduct the ensemble until his death in 1929 at the age of 77. His predecessors included Leland M. Gobal, Mr. Saeter, and Haskell Harr—the famous percussion teacher who also worked at the VanderCook College of Music in Chicago. Today, the Glenwood School for Boys and Girls continues to offer instrumental music as a regular part of the curriculum, maintaining the tradition that began over 118 years ago.

The Glenwood Manual Training School Band: 1892-1929

Many of the first school bands in the United States were organized in residential institutions dedicated to providing a home and education for disabled (e.g., Kraft, 1963), delinquent (e.g., Chicago Reform School, 1863), and dependent (Illinois Soldiers' Orphans' Home, 1898) children. These ensembles provided recreation, served as vocational training, supported military drill, and helped develop good public relations between the institutions and their communities.

This study provides a detailed history of the band at the Glenwood Manual Training School in Glenwood, Illinois, from its origin through the tenure of the ensemble's first long term conductor—Thad H. Davidson. The following questions guided this research: (a) What were the details surrounding the origin of the Glenwood Band (GB)? (b) How did the ensemble serve its members, the school, and surrounding communities? (c) What repertoire did the band perform? (d) Did the instrumentation of the GB evolve during the time period examined? (e) What financial resources supported the band? (f) What role did Thad H. Davidson play in the band's success? (g) How did the band change following Davidson's tenure?

Source material for this study included annual reports and periodicals of the institution, newspaper articles, photographs, and other documents found in the Glenwood archives. Although the GB originated at least 20 years before similar organizations became common in public schools (Birge, 1937), details concerning the operation and success of this group may have implications regarding the value of performance ensembles in residential institutions today. Furthermore, unlike all other school bands discovered prior to 1900 (e.g., Hash, 2006; Holz,
