None of the three were surprised to see the child, and each acknowledged the request with either a smile or a nod. The boy's eyes were focused on the child, and he was smiling. The girl's eyes were focused on the child, and she was smiling. The man's eyes were focused on the child, and he was smiling. The child was looking at the boy, and the boy was smiling. The child was looking at the girl, and the girl was smiling. The child was looking at the man, and the man was smiling. The boy, the girl, and the man were all smiling at the child.

Our history is one replete with these heroic labours. Fortunately we have not lost the great qualities represented. These great men, and others like them, represent other qualities to be cultivated, qualities typical of our country. Men like these, although much appreciated here and elsewhere, will be known elsewhere, and elsewhere. For in the developing and other countries you are soon likely to meet the noble, the heroic, the
