

Module 10 Lab Worksheet: Human Development and Growth

Introduction

This module is designed to assess the developmental processes, characteristics of an embryo, and how changes to the system during pregnancy and the postnatal period.

Objectives

After reading this module's lab module, you should be able to: (1) Describe the process of fertilization (2) Compare and contrast embryonic and fetal development and its developmental changes across the range systems of a female during pregnancy and the postnatal period.

Introduction

Human development is a process that begins at fertilization and continues through the prenatal and postnatal periods. The process begins with the fertilization of an egg and a sperm cell, which results in a zygote. The zygote then develops into an embryo, which is the early stage of development. The embryo then develops into a fetus, which is the later stage of development. The fetus then develops into a newborn, which is the final stage of development. The process of development is a continuous one, and it is influenced by a variety of factors, including genetics, environment, and nutrition. The process of development is also a process of growth, and it is characterized by the increase in size and complexity of the organism over time. The process of development is a process of change, and it is characterized by the transformation of the organism from a single cell into a complex, multi-cellular organism.

After the sperm meets the egg, the fertilization process begins. The fertilized egg cell then develops into a zygote, which is the first stage of development. The zygote then develops into an embryo, which is the second stage of development. The embryo then develops into a fetus, which is the third stage of development. The fetus then develops into a newborn, which is the fourth stage of development. The process of development is a continuous one, and it is influenced by a variety of factors, including genetics, environment, and nutrition. The process of development is also a process of growth, and it is characterized by the increase in size and complexity of the organism over time.
