

Chapter -4

Over head cost control

Meaning of overhead costs

According to CIMA (London) "Overhead is the aggregate of indirect materials, indirect wages and indirect expenses".

Classifications of Overhead Costs

Overhead costs may be classified according to

1. Functions
2. Elements
3. Behaviour

Classification according to functions

(a) Production overhead: It is also called as factory overhead, works overhead or manufacturing overhead, it means indirect expenditure incurred in connection with production operations. It is the aggregate of factory indirect material cost, indirect wages and indirect expenses.

Examples: lubricants, consumable stores, indirect wages, factory power and light, depreciation of plant and machinery etc.

(b) Administration overhead: These overheads are general in nature and consist of all costs incurred in the direction, control and administration which are not related directly to the production or selling and distribution function.

Examples: general management, salaries, audit fees, legal charges, postage and telephone, stationery and printing office rent and rates etc.

(c) Selling and distribution overhead: Selling overhead is the cost of seeking to create and stimulate demand or securing orders.

Examples: advertising salaries and commission of sales personnel, showroom expenses, traveling expenses, bad debts, catalogues and price lists etc.

Distribution overhead: It comprises all expenditure incurred from the time the product is completed in the factory till it reaches its destination or customer. It includes packing cost, carriage outward, delivery van expenses, warehousing costs, etc.

Selling overhead and distribution overhead are both related to sales function and thus are combined into one category or selling and distribution overhead. These are often referred to as 'after production costs' because these costs are incurred after production work is over.

1. Element wise classification

Under this method, the classification is done according to the nature and source of the expenditure. This method follows logically from the definition of overhead costs. On this basis, expenses are classified under three main groups given below.
