This longitudinal qualitative multi case study examines the mathematical experiences of three Bahamian students pursuing science degrees in American universities and its relationship to their previous mathematical experiences in their Bahamian high schools. Drawing on cultural psychology and sociocultural theories of learning this study found that the relationship between the academic preparedness of the participants on their experiences with collegiate mathematics is not limited to subject content only. The lessons learnt from the implied curriculum also play a role in their experiences with collegiate mathematics. Of the three participants two have had to learn/develop techniques for studying because they had not been sufficiently challenged in their previous environments to do so. Each of the cases also highlights some powerful constructs needed for success in mathematics and at least two emphasize making connections between concepts/procedures/manipulatives/tools and multiple approaches when solving problems. This study contributes to an emerging area of research on student persistence in college level mathematics courses as well as to the ongoing discussions in mathematics education regarding the role/importance of conceptual understanding and how to promote it. The study makes visible some of the ways in which students' post-secondary experiences with mathematics are shaped by their perception of their mathematical preparation thus providing a basis for discussions of possible curricular change in the Bahamas. It also suggests that issues such as confidence and school/teacher expectations of students may play a role in the development of conceptual understanding An Analysis of Final Course Grades in Two Different Entry Level Mathematics Courses Between and Among First Year College Students with Different Levels of High School Mathematics Preparation Carrie Muir, 2012 Thirty Years of Literacies Testing at the University of Cape Town Alan Cliff, 2024-05-10. This book delves into extensive research regarding the identification and characterization of academic literacies constructs encompassing academic literacy quantitative literacy mathematics comprehension and reasoning skills with a specific focus on their relevance within South African educational contexts. The volume provides an in depth exploration of the research behind the design and creation of assessments aimed at gauging these crucial literacies. It also delves into theoretical aspects of developmental work while shedding light on historical and contemporary inequalities in the South African educational landscape. Emphasising the practical implications of this research the book underscores the pivotal role that assessing academic literacies can play in the equitable selection of students particularly those hailing from educationally disadvantaged backgrounds. Additionally it highlights how such assessments can inform higher education responsiveness curriculum development programme implementation and the provision of support services for students ultimately aiding in informed student placement decisions.
